THE 270-degree sweeping panorama across the Southern Ocean to the islands on one side and a mountain range on the other is mesmerising – even more so when whales breach in front of the lounge room window.

For two days this was my viewing platform from Maitraya, perched on a cliff top on the edge of the ocean at Nananrup, 25km east of Albany.

Maitraya, meaning Place of Loving Kindness, is one of Australia's most stunning retreats. It can match the world's best.

For most of its 20 years, it was the family home of local entrepreneur Paul Terry, who built Albany's first five-star hotel, the Esplanade.

Now the new owners of $20 million Maitraya have added their personal touches and thrown open its doors, and its spectacular 130ha, to the corporate and leisure market.

When you step inside the stately mansion, an "aqua blue wave" carpet travels 92m around a magnificent indoor glass-covered conservatory. And that's just for starters.

Maitraya has 16 rooms, including formal lounge, formal dining, kitchen with large informal dining/family area, executive office/boardroom with wireless broadband and eight bedrooms – the highlight being the master bedroom, with its electronically operated retractable ceiling that opens to the sky.
